Preserves: Overview

All types of fruit sugar preserves are generally made from fruit, sugar and pectin (some very high-end products don't use pectin because of the high concentration of fruit). These days, in addition to or in place of sugar, many exporters use corn syrup or high fructose corn syrup, as both are cheaper sweeteners. Pectin is a type of fiber that occurs naturally in the cell walls of most fruits. When the fruit is heated in water and the correct quantities of both sugar and acid are present, pectin will form a colloidal solution that gels, or thickens, as it cools. Pectin can be added to a fruit preserve in powder or liquid form if the fruit is too low in naturally-occurring pectin; alternatively, the fruit low in pectin can be combined in the preserve with other fruit(s) that are naturally higher in pectin.

Do you know the differences between the various types of fruit spreads !

custor sugar A jelly is made solely from the juice of a fruit. Typically, jellies are the stiffest type of fruit preserves.

A jam is a thick purée, made from fruit pulp or crushed or mashed fruit. Preserves are similar to jams, but they consist of chunks of fruit (or even whole fruits) in thickened syrup. Chutney is a kind of preserve of fruits (and/or vegetables) cooked with sugar, vinegar and spices. Marmalades are preserves, too, but they're usually citrus-based. A conserve is a jam made from a blend of fruits. Conserves usually contain some form of citrus, as well as nuts and/or raisins; many contain alcohol, too. Fruit butter is a thick, smooth mixture, most often flavored with spices.

Using the reserved juice, cover all the white patches and then drizzle the juice over the entire pudding to glaze it.

Although I didn't add any more decoration to this Summer Pudding recipe, you can make it look very special by piling extra fresh cherries or raspberries on top and around the dish.
